NASA awards AECOM a US$58.3-million architectural engineering services contract

LOS ANGELES (Nov. 8, 2012) — AECOM Technology Corporation (NYSE: ACM), a leading provider of professional technical and management support services for public and private clients in more than 130 countries around the world, announced today that it was awarded a contract by NASA to support architect engineering services for the Facilities Engineering Branch at the agency's Ames Research Center in Moffett Field, California.

Under the contract, AECOM's support services will include facility master planning, facility engineering design, energy and water conservation program management, facility utilization and real property management, as well as engineering services for the research center.

"For more than two decades, AECOM has partnered with NASA in providing innovative architectural engineering services and advanced the interests of this vitally important client," said AECOM Chairman and Chief Executive Officer John M. Dionisio.

The contract has a maximum value of US$58.3 million and a one-year base period with four one-year options. Work under the contract began Nov. 1.
